Dear Mr. Moyers,

Hello! I hope that this letter finds you doing well. I am an independent filmmaker and wanted to let you know about my film Considering Democracy: 8 Things to Ask Your Representative. It's quite difficult for an independent filmmaker to get any exposure for films that are critical of political discussion in the U.S.

What is the film about? I wanted to find out what the rest of the world thought of the U.S. as well as how the U.S. compares to other industrial democracies, so I cashed out my educational retirement and left the U.S. to go find out. The film is structured into 8 main sections that become interwoven by the end of the film. I took the film on a small tour in the Southern part of the United States and after screening the film, people time and time again said, "You should get on Bill Moyer's show. Why don't you do that?" People seem to really like the film because it goes over issues that are rarely covered in the U.S. media, yet the information is delivered in a way that doesn't make people depressed. It's an engaging political documentary that seems to generate a lot of discussion.

Considering Democracy seeks to get more information and rationality based discussion in the United States on issues that affect all Americans. It seeks to engage Americans to be active participants and drive the debate as we approach the elections. Thank you for your time.

Sincerely,

Keya Lea Horiuchi

P.S. There's lots of information on the website <http://consideringdemocracy.com>. If you go to the Downloads page, then go to Supreme Court digs, you'll find rather interesting Supreme Court cases that examine corporate personhood. I find them fascinating. Good fun. Thanks!
